ABOUT

As a rising culinary star and Food Network Judge, Chef Kristin Sollenne has been making headlines for her contemporary food philosophy, lightened-up Italian fare, and approachable cooking tips, with regular appearances on Food Network, CBS, NBC, Fox and Fox Business. In 2014, she was featured on season ten of Food Network Star as a mentor to finalist Lucca Della Casa. In 2016 Kristin will appear as a finale judge on Food Network's Worst Cooks in America.

Sollenne, a 2013 honoree of Zagat's Top 30 under 30, has cooked for Taylor Swift, Seth Rogan, Ed Sheeran and the entire SNL cast. She currently oversees the three kitchens of the New York City Restaurant Group's (NYCRG) Bocca Di Bacco.

Along with successfully operating three restaurants in New York City, Kristin has recently released a couture apron line, CELLINI, currently being sold in Bloomingdale's.

Kristin adds author to her list of accolades with the release of her first cookbook Domestic Chíc – A Fashionable Fabulous Guide to Cooking & Entertaining by the Seasons.

CERTIFIED NUTRITIONIST

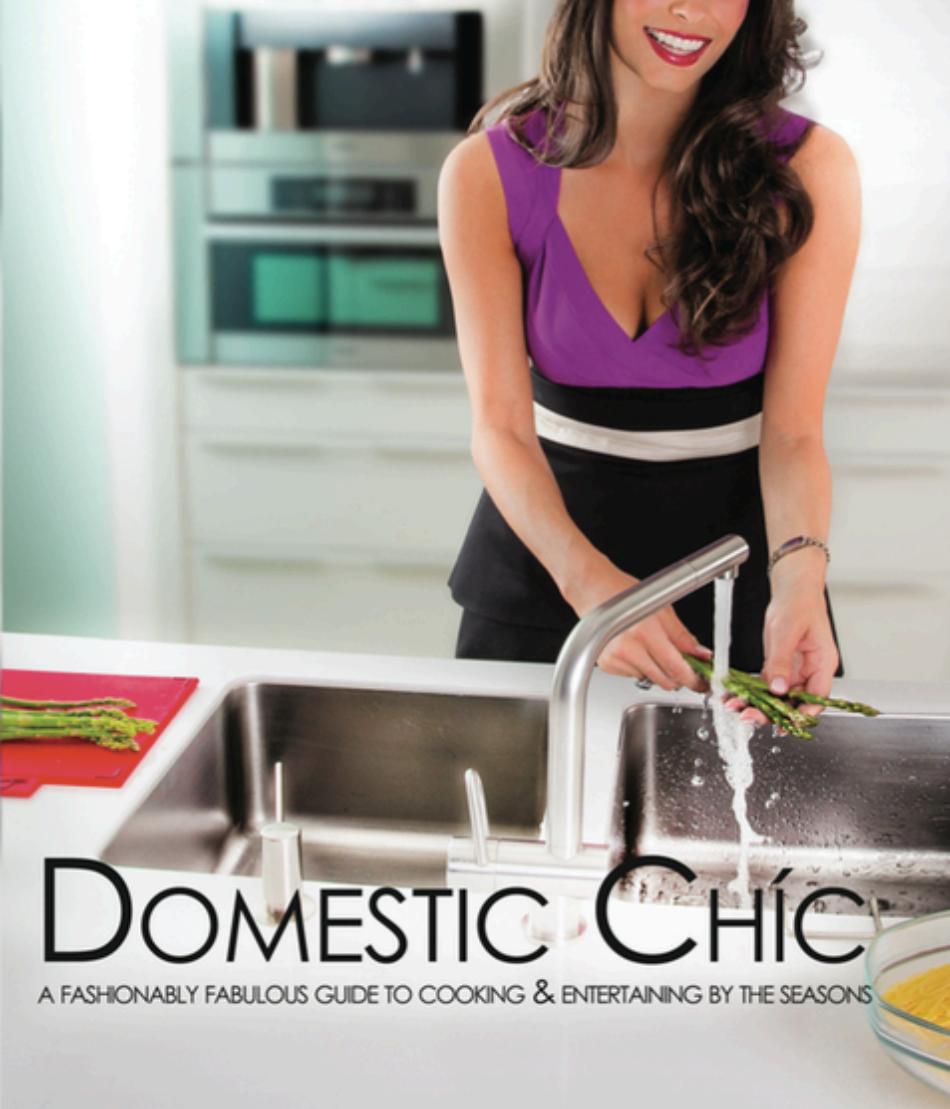

"My main philosophy is farm to-table with a focus on clean ingredients and keeping it simple," the 29-year-old executive chef says. "I think simple dishes speak a lot louder than over complicated ones. Simplicity actually enhances the flavors."

Sollenne's other culinary tenets for modernizing Italian cuisine include moderating portion sizes and using nutritious and full-flavored alternative ingredients. She centers most menu items on farm-fresh vegetables and herbs, lean proteins, whole grains, and heart-healthy olive oil while limiting the amount of butter and cream. "I get asked a lot: 'How can you make healthy Italian food?' she says. "It's all about the choices you make. You can still cook satisfying, great-tasting dishes on the lighter side when you use fresh in-season products. Or I'll make pasta with whole wheat, or spinach spaghetti, so it's not just all about heavy starches."
